

Multicultural Resources: An Annotated Bibliography of Video Resources

Prepared by the Alberta Association for Multicultural Education
2013

Preface

This bibliography of multicultural video resources is based upon resources previewed and evaluated at the EDUCATIONAL MEDIA MARKETPLACE CONFERENCE held annually in Alberta.

Criteria used to evaluate these resources are indicated on the evaluation form found in Appendix C. While resources listed are deemed appropriate for educational use, some may be considered more appropriate than others. In order to assist the user, each item has been assigned a number indicating its appropriateness using specific criteria as noted on the form < 1 (low) - 5 (high) >. Efforts were made to provide objective evaluations. However, all resources should be previewed prior to selection or purchase to assure that they meet individual educational/curriculum needs. Others may be available through ACCESS (Telephone: (780) 440-7755 OR Fax: (780) 440-8899). PLEASE NOTE THAT COSTS LISTED MAY HAVE CHANGED SINCE THE TIME THE EVALUATION TOOK PLACE. Please check costs with the distributor.

Some resources are included in collections distributed by the Urban and Regional Film Centres (see Appendix B). Inquiries on availability should be addressed directly to these centres.

Selection of Multicultural Resources

Certain givens in the evaluation of multicultural resources are assumed. The development of any resource collection usually takes the following considerations into account:

- Does the resource provide accurate information about cultures?
- Is there a positive approach to human similarities rather than differences?
- Does the resource communicate feelings of self-worth?
- Does it reflect racial, religious, and cultural diversity?
- Is there documentation of present and past achievements and contributions of minorities?
- Is there an attempt to portray minorities in the same range of socioeconomic settings as majority groups?
- Is there a fair proportion of minority and majority persons in mentally active, creative, leadership and problem-solving roles?
- Does the resource provide fair comment on Canada's cultural diversity?

Further, selection must take into account the linking of resources to defined teaching goals and objectives, as well as the extent to which the learner/viewer is matched to the material.

One approach for teachers and general users to take in the utilization of resources might be to analyze the material by classifying it under one or more of the following categories as a springboard for discussion:

1. Highlights the achievement of all groups.
2. Real experiences are given from the point of view of a single group.
3. Documents the historical experiences of more than one group.
4. A multi-diverse viewpoint is provided.
5. An objective view based on accepted facts is illustrated.
6. Raises issues for discussion rather than conclusion.

In the long run, resources should assist the viewer to reinforce positive self-images by taking essentially affirmative approaches to human similarities and differences – and at the same time implicitly and explicitly promote skills of critical thinking therein.
